NORTH CAROLINA
SCHOOL OF THE ARTS
A New Generation Of Artists

Commencement 96

Retiring saxophone teacher James Houlik delivered the Commencement Address to the class of 1996 at a 10 am ceremony on June 1 in the Stevens Center. Fourteen students received master's degrees, 75 received bachelor's degrees, 17 received college arts diplomas, and 129 received high school diplomas.

Mel Tomlinson, dance alumnus and former faculty member, received the Chancellor's Award for Outstanding Contribution to the Arts. A native of Raleigh, Tomlinson performed with Agnes de Mille's Heritage Dance Theater, Dance Theatre of Harlem, Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater, New York City Ballet, Boston Ballet and North Carolina Dance Theatre. He was the first recipient of the North Carolina Prize, awarded for outstanding work in the visual or performing arts.

“a gifted and motivated instructor”

A member of the School of the Arts music faculty for the past two decades, saxophonist James Houlik is acclaimed around the world as the preeminent performer on his instrument. He has performed solo recitals in many of the world's best known concert halls, including Carnegie Hall and Lincoln Center's Alice Tully hall, and with great orchestras such as the London Symphony. He has also earned “an international reputation as a gifted and motivated instructor . . . and a charismatic proponent of the power of music to bridge cultural, educational and spiritual chasms,” according to the Board of Governors of the University of North Carolina, which . . . presented him the O. Max Gardner Award, the highest teaching award given to a faculty member of the 16-campus University System.

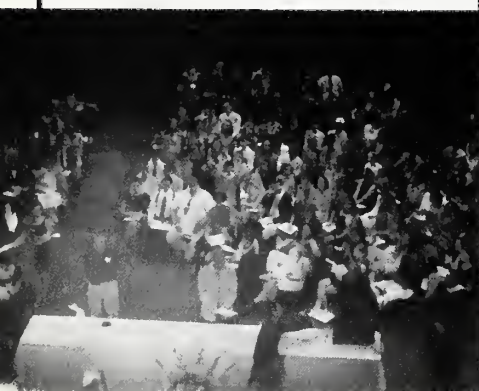

A native of Islip, N.Y., Mr. Houlik received his B.S. in music from the State University of New York at Predonia and his M.S. in music from the University of Illinois at Urbana, with postgraduate study at Ball State University. He came to North Carolina in 1966 to develop a saxophone program at East Carolina University, and joined the School of the Arts faculty in 1976 after serving as visiting professor for several years.

At NCSA, Mr. Houlik served as assistant dean of the school of music and created the school's Career Development Seminar, the first program in the country designed to prepare entry-level musicians for the real world. He also founded the Community Music School. In October 1995, Mr. Houlik took three of his current students and an ensemble of his former students — the award-winning New Century Saxophone Quarter — to Washington, D.C. to perform for President Bill Clinton at the White House during the National Medal of Arts awards ceremony.

Retiring after 30 years of service to the University of North Carolina system, Mr. Houlik has accepted a position as professor of saxophone and chairman of woodwinds at Duquesne University in Pittsburgh, Pa.

PARTING SHOTS

Anyone who has ever been involved in the production of a yearbook — even one this small — knows that it is no easy undertaking. Add to that the everyday time pressures of any student at NCSA, and you've got a stressful situation. Often the best intentions fall victim to hectic schedules and projects with higher priorities. These are some of the factors that contributed to the delay in completing this volume of Muse. There are a handful of people who contributed to this effort, and we thank you all. (You know who you are — we won't name names for fear of forgetting someone). And most of all, thanks to the student body for your patience and understanding.

The Student Activities Office

Blasts from the Past

From Page One: (clockwise from top left) A student protest ousts an unpopular administrator (circa 1990). Students construct the Gianinni Stage in honor of the School's founder (circa 1992). Who's that burning the beef? Scott Templin cooks up a Beaux Arts feast (circa 1993). Before they became well known as "Jump Little Children" we knew them (and loved them) as "Sound Painters" (circa 1992). Early efforts at recycling (circa 1990). The pickle on parade (circa 1993). A student response to the Gulf War (circa 1990-91).
